

Parochial school wants to share public school buses

CARMEL school district trustees agreed Tuesday night to consider giving private school pupils in Carmel Valley a ride on public school buses.

But the board members hold little hope that it would be a practical solution to the high cost of busing students to school.

Headmaster Laurie Boone of All Saints' Episcopal Day School in Carmel Valley asked that the joint busing plan be considered. She said district buses on Carmel Valley Road pass the same streets where parochial school pupils wait for their buses.

Mrs. Boone said it is costly to run a bus system for the smaller private school and it appeared logical to try and combine the two operations.

She added that All Saints' pupils would fit into Carmel busing patterns, rather than having the bus routes adapted to their needs.

While trustees were sympathetic, Superintendent Carl Wilsey pointed out a host of potential problems including schedule changes on minimum school days, possible interference with other school district activities and potential district insurance liability.

Board members told Wilsey to look into the matter further. But they emphasized that the only way they would approve a joint busing program would be if it could be done at no additional cost.

"I don't want to get into it and hear six months later it's costing the district $6,000," Trustee Richard Wilsdon said.

In other actions, the board accepted the resignation of middle school teacher Keith M. Crist and hired four temporary teachers: Royce Tooker, Jean Agan and Bob Swartz at middle school and Lori Perkins at Captain Cooper School.

The trustees also discussed special education programs in the district and listened to several parents with complaints. Most of the complaints were that parents get little information about which school their child will be in from one year to the next.

Cal-Am will appeal decision

County planners request EIR

THE MONTEREY COUNTY Planning Commission asked Wednesday for an environmental impact report (EIR) before California-American Water Co. can drill four new wells in the Lower Carmel Valley.

The commission voted 4-2 to require the report, about potential impacts on riverbank vegetation and the water supply for Carmel Valley. Cal-Am will appeal the decision to the board of supervisors.

The CH2M Hill Co. vegetation report, a county-commissioned study on riverbank erosion that delayed the well permit hearing until this week, said Cal-Am wells did not cause large-scale damage to plants. The report, issued two weeks ago, was criticized by two witnesses who argued against granting the permits without requiring specific protection for plants along the Carmel River.

Commissioner William Peters of Carmel Valley said there is no great urgency to drill the wells and the lack of a "rational planning approach for water use in Carmel Valley" dictates that the commission get more information before allowing the wells.

Cal-Am wants to drill the wells between Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club and the Rancho Canada Golf Course. They would have a potential yield of 5,000 acre-feet per year.

This would boost Cal-Am capacity to the maximum 22,000 acre-feet the state Public Utilities Commission says is available to the utility.

Peters said an EIR is necessary because the CH2M Hill study has been "significantly challenged. It is appropriate for us to look at it."

HE ALSO POINTED out that the Carmel Sanitary District areawide facilities plan will be completed in six months. The district wants to retain the options of using treated wastewater to irrigate Valley golf courses. Ted Weller, a director of the district, told the commission he is afraid permitting the wells now might prevent the sanitary district from using portions of the courses for water reclamation.

John Williams of Carmel Highlands, a member of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, said the board will sign a contract Friday with the regional coastal commission to survey all water resources and water needs

Board of Supervisors approve two-lot minor subdivision near the Village

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors approved a two-lot minor subdivision near Carmel Valley Village after requiring the builder to prove he can put a house on the small triangular building site on one of the lots.

Richard DiLorenzo won approval to go ahead with the subdivision on Chaparral Drive, east of El Caminito Road and north of Carmel Valley Village.

The board granted his appeal on a 3-1 vote, with Supervisor Michal Moore of Monterey opposed. Supervisor Sam Farr of Carmel was on vacation.

The county minor subdivision committee denied the subdivision because easements for steep slopes and yard setbacks left only a triangular 1,760-square-foot building site on one 1-acre parcel. The other parcel is 1.2 acres.

DiLorenzo said he plans a small house on the lot and can build it on the remaining site. Wes Arvig of the county planning department staff said the committee feared DiLorenzo might not build there and that someone else would seek a variance in the future to build closer to the property line.

The board granted the subdivision, requiring DiLorenzo to show his building plans to the planning department before the final subdivision map is approved.

Engagement party in the redwoods

Waikiki, Harris announce winter wedding plans

Plans for a winter wedding were recently disclosed by Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Waikiki of Watsonville, who announced the engagement of their daughter, Leinaala Saramae Waikiki, to Robert K. Harris of Carmel Valley. Marlene Riede Harris of Carmel Valley and Robert Harris of Monterey are the parents of the groom-to-be.

Nalani Waikiki was in charge of the engagement party. Family and friends were seated for an elegant picnic at lace-covered tables with crystal candle holders and floral decor in a setting of redwoods at the Henry Cowell State Park.

Leinaala recently completed studies as a medical assistant at the Southern California College of Medical and Dental Assistants in Garden Grove.

Bob, a Carmel High School graduate, majored in marine biology at UC Santa Cruz. He will begin graduate studies at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks, Alaska, in the fall.

The wedding will take place in Watsonville in January.

U.S. Navy Seaman Apprentice Paul K. Corona, son of Donald J. and Regina M. Corona of Carmel Valley, is on extended deployment in the Mediterranean Sea.

He is assigned to the ammunition ship USS Suribachi.

Thus far in the cruise, the Suribachi has participated in training exercises with other units and those of allied nations.

Corona joined the Navy in November 1977.

Russel Wolter -farmer who uses no pesticides

One of California's largest organic growers farms his 140 acres on the edge of suburbia

By KEN PETERSON

THE FIRST THING you notice about Russel Wolter's fields are the insects. And the weeds. A source of fear for most commercial growers, they are, to Wolter, badges of pride that show he is an organic row cropper. In fact, he is one of the largest in California.

On his 40-acre ranch in Carmel Valley, Wolter harvests up to three crops of lettuce, broccoli, cauliflower and pumpkins each year. He also lives on the ranch. Wolter leases an additional 100 acres from the Odello brothers. The land is east of Highway 1. He grows corn there in addition to the other row crops.

Pinched by downsliding crop prices and urban encroachment, Wolter has kept both his good humor and the organic farming practices started more than 30 years ago by his father.

"I don't know why my dad did it," he said, pausing a moment for thought. But as long as Wolter can remember, there has never been a bug sprayed or a weed poisoned on his farm.

"Other growers, if they couldn't spray, would be out here doing anything to get rid of bugs," he said. "They'd come out here and pound them between two boards if they had to."

"I take the nonchalant approach. I just go to sleep at night and don't worry about it."

ORGANIC FARMING on a commercial scale is not all passive nonchalance. Wolter works hard to produce a crop that not only is organic, but also up to the standards of other lettuce growers.

He fertilizes his fields, using chicken manure from the Carmel Valley Egg Ranch and other sources. He is experimenting with liquid fish emulsion fertilizer trying to find an easy way to pump it through irrigation pipes.

Wolter also may purchase a $6,500 seedling transplant machine to get his lettuce plants in the ground. Now, he sows with seeds.

"See," he says, kneeling over a row of lettuce seedlings, "if we buy the transplanter, the lettuce will be bigger than this to start."

"By the time the weeds sprout, they will be this big," he said, indicating an imaginary head the size of a softball.

New technology also could reduce his weeding problems, improve lettuce production and protect his profit margin.

AS A MEMBER of the California Certified Organic Farmers (CCOF), Wolter also is required to build up the soil on his farm by adding trace elements, humus and other nutrients to improve soil quality.

According to Barney Brickmont of Santa Cruz, the president of CCOF, "A healthy plant won't have insect problems. If you build the soil up, you won't have a battle with insects. It's hard to believe, but that's the way it works."

This is not to say that Wolter doesn't lose vegetables to insects. He does. And one day 12 years ago, he nearly ended the organic tradition because of aphid infestation.

Aphids were devouring a crop of beans and Wolter decided he would have to spray to save the crop.

"It was the hardest phone call I ever made," he said, grimacing at the memory. He called a pesticide spraying firm.

The cropduster was ready to come in, but the weather turned foggy.

"They like to spray in the morning when there's no wind," Wolter said. "By the time the fog burned off, the wind was up."

"It was foggy for two days and when I went out the third morning to check, the aphids were gone! You've never seen anybody grab the phone so fast," he said exultantly. The spraying run was canceled.

He has been committed to organic methods since. And now, he said, it is "a matter of pride."

WOLTER HAS his own label, "Down to Earth," for his lettuce. But it also is packaged under the label of any commercial packing house that buys from him. So a lot of salad eaters may be getting organic Wolter lettuce without knowing it.

He also sells his produce at his brother Luis' market on Carmel Valley Road, at Nielsen Bros. Market in Carmel and to restaurants and organic food stores on the Monterey Peninsula.

He has been tempted to spray on a few other occasions, most recently by a representative from the lettuce broker who handles his crop.

"He was perfectly sincere and suggested I just spray 'a little' around the fields," Wolter said. "He figured this way I would keep the insects down, but I wouldn't be doing a lot of spraying."

"Well, I told him I'd think about his suggestion—I didn't want to tell him no right then. About two months later, he asked me if I ever did any spraying around my fields."

"Spraying?" I said. "I thought you said praying. I've done that several times."

Wolter grinned. "He just threw up his hands," Wolter said.

SOMETIMES HE will bring in predatory insects, like ladybird beetles and lacewings, to control aphids for him. But by not using pesticides, he gets a natural supply of these predators in his fields already.

Still, he loses crops occasionally, and has produce rejected by the brokers.

But, Wolter said, "We make a profit." He gets favorable lease terms on both the ranch and the Odello land because both are short-term leases. And by not using pesticides or chemical fertilizers, he cuts down on overhead.

But some years, only high wholesale prices kept him financially healthy.

If he is ever forced to leave his ranch, Wolter is ready to continue his organic methods on leased farmland elsewhere. The Odello property was his first try at leasing other land, a successful effort that gave him confidence to do it again if need be.

Wolter took over his family's ranch in 1947 while he still was in high school. His father had become ill.

HOME GROWN jack-o'-lantern still is firm and on display on a picnic table at the Wolter ranch.

Rezoning approved for Robles subdivision

REZONING FOR a seven-unit subdivision in Robles del Rio was approved Wednesday by the Monterey County Planning Commission. The commission decided there would be enough public benefit from the project to offset the problem of additional growth in the congested area.

The commission voted 5-1, with chairman Charmaine Cruchett opposed, to allow the rezoning to split the 22.8-acre parcel into seven lots ranging from one to five acres in size.

The property is situated at the end of Calle de los Agrinensors above Hitchcock Canyon fire road, which completes the road loop through Robles del Rio.

At the instigation of Commissioner William Peters of Carmel Valley, the commission voted to require the subdividers to pave the fire road through the property; put a fire hydrant on the Hitchcock Canyon end of the land to help protect homeowners' property in the canyon; install a 60,000-gallon fire storage tank; put 2.5 acres of the land into scenic easement; annex to the Carmel Valley Fire District; guard against drawdown on neighboring wells if the development has its own water system rather than joining California-American Water Co.; and agree to join any assessment district formed to improve roads in Robles del Rio.

By doing these things, Peters said, "There would be public benefit counterbalancing building in an area where we fundamentally don't want to build."

LETTERS

Thanks for weed clearing

Dear Editor:

We would like to thank all of the residential and commercial property owners and renters in Carmel Valley for their cooperation thus far in our lot clearing and weed abatement programs.

We are approximately halfway through this summer's fire season and fortunately have not experienced any threatening wildfires in this area; however, the driest months are yet to come.

Buckeye 4-H grateful

Dear Editor:

The Buckeye 4-H Club would like to extend its thanks to all the buyers who supported them at the Monterey County Fair:

Bruce Church Co.; Hacienda Hay and Feed; Canoble Inc.; Sun Harvest; David Peyton; Fred Bennett; Tom Bengaard Ranch; Carmel Valley Rotary Club; McCreery and Associates Insurance; Ventana Inn and Restaurant; Mann Packing Co.; Intersport Inc.; Carmel Valley Rock and Sand; and Northern California Savings and Loan Association.

Buckeye 4-H Club
Carmel Valley

Let us all take another look around our homes with the intentions of ensuring the fire safety of our families and neighbors. Trim back all dry grass and brush a minimum of 30 feet around all structures and property lines. Clean the roofs of all pine needles and leaves, and trim back any overhanging tree limbs. Have available in plain sight a length of garden hose with a nozzle shutoff and a roof ladder for the use of firefighters in case of emergencies. Taking these simple precautions makes sense for the dangers of a serious and damaging wildfire exists every summer here in Carmel Valley.

Chief, Carmel Valley Fire Dept.

Appalled by SPCA barbecue

Dear Editor:

Please send me the address of your local Monterey County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. As a true animal liberationist, I am appalled by their recent barbecue as described in your Aug. 17 issue.

I will be sure to send you a copy of the letter I send them.

$3.26 million price tag

Upper Valley ranch sells to physician

Escrow is scheduled to close in October on the $3.26 million sale of a sprawling cattle ranch in the Upper Carmel Valley.

Matters are "proceeding normally," according to Norman Miller of Carmel Valley. Miller, executor of the Andrew Blomquist estate, said Wednesday the sale to an Orange County physician "probably will go through."

Meanwhile, Miller still is looking for a non-profit organization to take over and preserve 640 acres of the ranch in their natural state.

Blomquist, who died Feb. 8, specified in his will that the ranch was to be left to a tax-exempt charity to be chosen by Miller.

The remaining 7,162 acres were sold in an estate sale May 12. Dr. and Mrs. Marvin Stern of Cypress were the high bidders after a bidding war drove the price up past the $3 million mark.

The Sterns had negotiated purchase of the property for $2.05 million, but the deal was not completed before Blomquist died.

The sale of the land was then put in the hands of the probate court and the bidding ensued.

A Carmel Valley syndicate including real estate broker Enos Fouratt and an out-of-town group both joined in the bidding for the land.

The 640-acre parcel has attracted "several inquiries," according to Miller.

"The problem is trying to get somebody who will take it over and be responsible," he said. "It's rather difficult to find the right one, someone who won't dispose of it and use the money for something else."

In modern-day America, it is very difficult to get around unless you own a car. Yes, yes, we know about bicycles, horses and even feet. We own some in fact.

But to be practical, after you grow up you sometimes want to spend the weekend in King City or someplace. You can't get there without a car.

The same is true for horses. Henry Ford must be smiling in his grave. You can't take a horse to King City for the weekend unless you have a horse trailer.

Now when someone first gets a horse, it is such a thrill that he never thinks he might someday want more. He doesn't ever think he might want to take the horse to King City.

But even though Alec Ramsay was happy on the desert island with The Black Stallion, after a few weeks he wanted to go somewhere else.

So the horse owner goes out looking for $500 horse trailers. He has this sum in mind because it is about what he paid for his first horse.

Unfortunately, $500 trailers are in worse shape than his horse. After the horse owner has crawled under several and inspected how they are or are not put together, he goes looking for a regular factory-made, two-horse, tandem axle model with electric brakes.

Eventually, he sees such a horse trailer, secondhand, advertised for $1,595. He fails to buy it immediately not realizing that anything under $1,600 is a steal. Another horse owner who has been looking at horse trailers longer buys the bargain trailer so fast the neophyte doesn't even have time to bargain.

Finally, he buys a brand-new, stripped-down, cheap model for $2,400 and hitches it to his brand new stripped-down model truck ($9,000). Pays Hap Richardson another $100 to add a resistor or take out a resistor so the electric trailer brakes don't grab. (Every electric brake system has to be fiddled with this way.) Pays Radio Shack another $200 for a 43-channel CB because he's thought of a cute "handle." Pays all and sundry outfitters another few thousand for all the accessories he didn't order with the outfit originally so he could keep the original price down. Finally, would you believe he is ready to take to the road?

No, he's not. A kind of strange paralysis sets in at this point. Call it buck fever. Call it stage fright. Call it absolute terror at going out in California traffic with an expensive rig—especially one with a cotton pickin' horse in it! It is not part of his self-image.

Now listen up, little friend. We're going to lay on you soothing advice to set you and your horse trailer free.

First of all, if you can drive Carmel Valley Road in a horse trailer you can drive anywhere. There is no worse road in the world for trailering horses than Carmel Valley Road.

If you are hauling two horses of unequal size, load the heavy one on the left. If you have only one Backyard Pet, load him on the left. The reason for not loading a single horse on the right will become apparent the first time you accelerate to make a left hand turn across traffic.

Every mile or so, or every time you get five or more other drivers steaming behind you, the law requires you to pull off to the right and let them by. If there were much of a drop at the right-hand shoulder and if you had just one horse—loaded on the right—you would be in trouble.

You will be in trouble with the California Highway Patrol if you go more than five miles an hour slower than the rest of the traffic flow. The Sheriff's Department is more understanding. Most Monterey County Sheriff's deputies are closet cowboys; they understand the need for going around Porter's Curve at 15 miles an hour or down Farm Center Hill in second gear. Just don't hold up traffic.

When you come to a section of road that has to be taken slowly, slow down before you come to it. Horses can withstand acceleration by sitting on their butt chains but braking bumps them on the chest and causes them to "gallop" in place. Tap the brakes before turning a corner. The horse soon learns to "set" his hind end in anticipation.

Feed the horse sparingly in the trailer. This business about loading the manger of the trailer with feed just because there is a manger is dangerous. First of all, it's not feeding time. Secondly, horses can ride long distances in trucks and railroad cars without a manger full of feed in front of them and still put away a good supper on arrival.

Thirdly, horses tend to dehydrate while traveling. We're not sure what natural mechanism this represents—increased adrenalin maybe? Anyhow, you will notice that most horses drop manure immediately after getting into the trailer. At the same time their mouth goes dry. If pellets or grain or other concentrated feed is placed in the manger, the horse may nervously gulp it down and then choke. We are even nervous about alfalfa hay. If feed must be placed in the manger, use oat hay for its bulk.

Of course, the horse should be rewarded with something delicious immediately upon getting in. A piece of sugar or apple will satisfy him that he has done the right thing.

Until you have hauled Backyard Pet enough years and miles to know him thoroughly, always tie his head. He needs the extra support of leaning on his halter. Some people object that this can make halter marks on the horse's head. So pad the halter if necessary.

Never fasten the tail chain until the horse's head is fastened. A horse who falls out backwards over the tail chain is going to get hurt. For the same reason always unfasten the tail chain before untying the head.

It's all right to pour the horse a little grain just before unloading. That'll keep him from turning around. You pour a little grain in front of the horse. You walk around and open the tailgate and undo the chain. You go back to the front end and unsnap the trailer snap from the horse's halter. You go back to the back end and pull his tail while commanding him to back.

Clunk, clatter, back comes the horse. Immediately on exiting the trailer he stops and stares around which gives you a chance to catch his trailing lead rope.

"Isn't this wonderful?" says the horse. "I'm someplace else!"

"Isn't this wonderful?" thinks the horse owner. "My horse is someplace else. Now that I've got a horse trailer, I can take my horse to King City for the weekend any time I want."

project said roads in Robles already were congested and that there were problems with fire protection and water supply.

ROBLES DEL Rio has only one access road to serve nearly 400 homes and 900 people. County standards now require two access roads for any development of more than 200 homes.

Jack Van Zander of Bestor Engineers Inc., representing the developers, said there were many public benefits because the project is a major rather than minor subdivision. He pointed out that a minor subdivision could get up to four building sites on the land. Even without a split one home could be built there, he said.

David Barish, who lives in Hitchcock Canyon, said the project would create additional traffic on that narrow, winding road. He presented one petition with 19 neighbor signatures opposing the subdivision. A second petition sent to the commission had the names of 20 opponents.

Peters admitted that Robles del Rio has problems. "It's Carmel Valley's fire trap," he said.

Commissioners Marc Del Piero and Manuel Jimenez were absent.

Peters noted that Cal-Am serves only a small fraction of the developable area of Carmel Valley, yet no real plans have been made for water to supply the rest of the Valley.

Richard Sullivan, vice president of Cal-Am in charge of the Monterey district, said the PUC has allocated 4,000 acre-feet to the Valley, including 2,000 acre-feet now used by agriculture and homes.

A total of 15,000 acre-feet per year was called the "safe yield" of the Valley aquifer by the PUC. With the four new wells, Cal-Am would be taking 11,000 acre-feet of that.

THE QUESTION of whether trees and brush along the Carmel River prevent erosion and are harmed by drawdown from the high-yield Cal-Am wells was not answered, although several witnesses challenged the $10,000 CH2M Hill study.

The study attributed erosion along the river to sand and gravel extractions from the bed and the fact that upstream dams reduce the amount of silt available to rebuild the riverbed.

The study also blamed most of the tree loss along the river on the drought.

Edwin Lee of Carmel, a member of the now-defunct Zone 11 Advisory Committee, said trees were killed long before the drought, and vegetation is least healthy near existing high-yield wells. He also disputed the silt loss theory, saying it is not supported by the facts.

Cal-Am well expert Russell Mount said the wells could drawdown the water table as much as 45 feet in a drought, but that would only be in the immediate vicinity of the well. With all four wells in action, more distant effects might be a five- to 10-foot drawdown on the water table in a drought.

In a three-day test this year of one Lower Valley well, Mount said the drawdown was only two to five feet in the immediate vicinity of the well.

Commissioners Peters, Charmaine Cruchett, Charlie Williams and Joseph Sullivan favored the EIR. Commissioners Peter Caiotto and Walter Basham opposed. Manuel Jimenez and Marc Del Piero were absent.

Smith resigns for 'personal reasons'

Phil Smith, a teacher and principal in the Carmel Unified School District for 15 years, resigned Monday citing "personal reasons."

Smith, who was to serve as principal of both Carmelo and Tulareitos Schools this year, will stay until a successor is found.

Superintendent Carl Wilsey said that could take between four and eight weeks.

The district board of trustees accepted Smith's resignation with regret Monday night.

"I feel good leaving the field of education after 15 years in one of the finest districts the state has,"

Money not part of school talks

Contract talks between Carmel Unified School District teachers and the district opened Wednesday with the salary issue apparently settled by the passage of Proposition 13.

The district board of trustees is suggesting that the same basic contract continue forward from last year, with some adjustments defining when and how teachers may take a leave of absence and changes in a few other terms of the pact.

Superintendent Carl Wilsey said the district's proposal offers no major changes from the existing contract.

Cost-of-living pay increases were taken out of the contract picture when the state Legislature froze public employee pay for all local agencies which accepted state bailout funds.

The teachers' association had asked for an 8 percent pay increase in May, before Prop. 13 cut school district income significantly.

River project bids opened by Sept. 19

Bids will be opened by mid-September for the first flood control project along the Carmel River, according to Gene Ayers of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service in Salinas.

The service will conduct a site tour of the Meadows Road subdivision on Tuesday, Sept. 12 at 1 p.m. for potential bidders on the $400,000 project.

Ayers said bids will be opened Sept. 19 at 10 a.m. and construction should start soon afterward.

Ayers said bidders on the job should meet at the Holiday Inn on Rio Road at Highway 1 if they wish to go on the site tour.

Smith said Tuesday.

Although he said his plans are "indefinite," he expects to remain in the area.

Smith spent five years as a teacher at Carmelo School, six years as principal there, and the last four years as principal of Tulareitos School.

With Carmelo principal Anita Silver on leave this year, Smith was scheduled to serve as principal of both Carmel Valley elementary schools.

Valley boy injured by car on Esquiline Bridge

A 7-year-old Carmel Valley boy was injured Monday when he ran into the path of a passing car driven by a Carmel woman on the Esquiline bridge in Carmel Valley Village.

Jonathan Seaborn, of 43 E. Carmel Valley Road, was treated for a head laceration at the emergency room run by Drs. Paul Tocchet and Richard Viken in the Village.

According to the California Highway Patrol, the incident occurred about 4:48 p.m. as Seaborn was walking on the southwest side of the access bridge to Robles del Rio.

Christine P. Churchill, 25, of 26160 Camino Real, was driving north at 20 to 25 mph when Seaborn darted out in front of her car, tripped and fell, the CHP reported.
